

UNSHAKABLE RESOLVE

Earthquake survivors sift through the rubble of their homes and businesses, searching for personal effects and beginning the long journey of recovery from this terrible disaster.

HOPE & HEALING

Two years since a massive earthquake struck Haiti, Heart to Heart is still working to provide hope and healing to the Haitian people, whose unshakable resolve inspires us to do more and be more for them.

The Haitian people and Heart to Heart aren't alone in this struggle; you have been with us every step of the way.

Your support has enabled us to advance the work of key local partners in Haiti, strengthen healthcare capacity at the community level, and make quality medical services more accessible in underserved parts of the country.

This two-year progress report gives you a glimpse of the impact you have made through your support of Heart to Heart's mobilization efforts.

In the first 12 months after the earthquake, we focused on mobilizing volunteers and resources to build an effective humanitarian "bridge" of support to Haiti.

The second 12 months saw us transition from relief to recovery, helping stabilize Haiti's fragile healthcare system in strategic locations. We bolstered the efforts of our local partners, as they continued to provide health and hope to thousands of people each month.

We have now established a long-term presence in Haiti, so we can continue mobilizing our global network to help Haitian communities move from survivability to sustainability.

It's important work, and we'll need your ongoing support to achieve this objective. Check out Page 8 for tangible ways to show your unshakable resolve for Haiti and its people.

MOBILIZE!

At 4:53 p.m. (local time) on January 12, 2010, near the city of Léogâne, a 7.0-magnitude earthquake struck the Caribbean nation of Haiti. It violently shook the already-underserved country for 78 terrifying seconds. When it was over, Heart to Heart's work began.

The quake claimed more than 300,000 lives and displaced an additional 1.5 million people.

We quickly mobilized by sending personnel to the disaster zone and rallying supporters to help us respond. Within 72 hours we had boots on the ground and a base of operations established near the capital of Port-au-Prince.

We connected with local partners and deployed medical volunteers to makeshift clinics. With the help of companies like FedEx, we airlifted medicines and supplies with increasing frequency.

Our volunteer-driven, health-centered efforts attracted Haitian medical professionals looking for a way to help. We developed "extreme teams" of medical volunteers to travel deeper into the quake zone and see if more communities needed assistance.

Within 30 days, we helped our local partners move from the tent cities to public buildings to provide a continuum of care.

Your support helped us mobilize hundreds of volunteers and millions of dollars worth of humanitarian aid to save lives.

By the one-year mark after the earthquake, you made healthcare accessible for more than 67,000 people.

Each one is alive today, because you rushed to their cause and helped us create a humanitarian bridge when help was needed the most.

RECOVERY

In 2011, Heart to Heart's work in Haiti transitioned from relief to recovery, working to help build healthcare capacity in several of the communities where our local partners were operating.

Heart to Heart believed that we could best support our local partners by achieving official status from the Haitian government to operate nationwide. We took the necessary step to establish a long-term presence in Haiti, which demonstrated our commitment to our local partners and the people they serve. They also recognized our pledge to walk with them on the road toward sustainability.

In our second 12 months in Haiti, we continued to deploy medical volunteers and humanitarian aid. Our volunteers provided direct medical services, when necessary, but mostly helped local partners train and mentor Haitian healthcare professionals.

We also joined the fight against a familiar foe—cholera. This waterborne illness continued to spread throughout Haiti, claiming innocent lives in its path. With key support from the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee and many other donors, we were able to respond to the crisis in Southeast Haiti, where very few humanitarian groups are operating. We established community health committees to educate local residents about the spread and severity of cholera. We also armed them with cholera-prevention kits.

By the two-year mark after the earthquake in Haiti, your gifts gave more than 108,000 people access to quality medical care!

But so much more work needs to be done. Our local partners are entering a critical phase of their recovery efforts, and they are looking to us and to you for ongoing support and partnership.

Turn the next page and find out how you can show your unshakable resolve and help our partners point Haiti to a healthier, more hopeful future.
